The Journal of Management & Organization is an international peer-reviewed journal for timely publication of research, scholarship, educational and practitioner perspectives on management-related themes and topics. It aims to provide global perspectives on management and organization of benefit to scholars, educators, students, practitioners, policy-makers and consultants. The Journal of Management & Organization (JMO) publishes on areas that address the interests of management academics worldwide. In one forum, the Journal of Management & Organization covers:

- Qualitative and quantitative empirical research articles
- Theoretical and conceptual articles
- Literature reviews - including those from theses
- Articles on management education and learning
- Practitioner perspectives and case studies
- methodological advances - including those from theses

Article formats include, but are not restricted to, traditional academic research articles, case studies, literature reviews, approaches to teaching, learning and management development, and interviews with prominent executives and scholars. Original articles which inform management research and practice from outside the discipline - such as from psychology, education, political science, sociology, statistics and research design - will also be considered.
